

Abstract of the Disclosure:

A threaded pin is particularly suitable for connecting carbon electrodes that have at least one socket with an internal thread. The pin has a central axis running along its length, two end portions, a midplane between the two end portions, and at least one external thread. The pin is formed with a protrusion that constitutes an abutment surface extending beyond the external thread and faces towards one of the end portions.

WHS:nt - K&S-S3P4F//3/11/2004